The Spanish Studies program in the Department of Languages and Applied Linguistics at the University of California, Santa Cruz is proud of our alumni and their accomplishments. We are starting this Alumni Spotlight as a way of highlighting those alumni who are doing great things. For this occasion, we got in touch with five of our recent graduates in Spanish Studies: Jacqueline Morales, María Lemus, Janette Montejano, Claire Luong, and Jazmín Sosa. These are their stories:
1. Which year did you graduate from UCSC? Which degree(s) did you obtain?
I graduated in 2016 with a double major in Spanish and Legal Studies.

2. What did you do after graduation?
Since graduating from UCSC I have been working as an Assistant Director of Tutoring at Learning Support Services (LSS), which is the largest tutoring program at UCSC.

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program?
When I began taking courses in the SPHS program, I became interested in studying Spanish and also became inspired to take on leadership positions. Throughout my time as an undergraduate student, I worked as a tutor, a peer advisor at the EOP office, and an office assistant for the LSS office. All these positions sparked my interest in working in student affairs in higher education and have challenged me to learn more about the nuances of teaching and learning. My time in the program in Spanish Studies also helped me understand what it means to serve Latino first-generation students especially at a Hispanic-Serving Institution like UCSC.

4. What are your future plans?
I recently applied to several master’s programs in Leadership in Higher Education and I just got accepted to the Master’s program in Higher Education at the University of Michigan. I hope to embark on my graduate studies this Fall 2021 to eventually become a director at a learning center or student affairs program at a university to ultimately become a Dean or Chancellor of student success.

Jacqueline has recently been accepted into graduate programs at the University of Southern California, Columbia University, University of Michigan, and Harvard University. Jacqueline has decided to accept the offer from Harvard and will be starting there next academic year. Congratulations, Jacqueline!
MARÍA LEMUS

1. Which year did you graduate from UCSC? Which degree(s) did you obtain?
I graduated from UCSC in 2017 and obtained a B.A. in Spanish Studies and a B.A. in Feminist Studies.

2. What did you do after graduation?
After graduation I became a Middle School Math teacher at a bilingual school in San Jose, CA. I taught for 3 years before transitioning to my current role as an instructional coach at the same school. In my role as a teacher, I solidified my interest and passion for bilingual education models and the education field which I had become interested in during my studies at UCSC.

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program?
The training that I received in Spanish studies is directly aligned to my current role and my post-undergraduate career. At UCSC, I had access to a community of supportive professors in the Spanish Studies program who created a welcoming and rigorous community of learning. This community led me to work with professors who believed in my potential and opened opportunities for me to explore my various interests: from learning more about Latin American literature and history to learning about the science of Spanish linguistics.

More specifically, during my last year in Spanish Studies, I became highly interested in bilingualism and different models of bilingual education while taking various classes on bilingualism in the United States. After graduating, I knew that I wanted to continue learning more about the different bilingual models in schools so I decided to seek working in one. I have been working at a school with a dual-immersion language program (Spanish-English) that draws on the cultural and linguistic strengths that students bring with them, all of which I had learned about at UCSC. Additionally, I was able to feel confident in becoming a teacher thanks to the support and training I got from Professor González-Pagani who allowed me the opportunity to be a SPHS tutor. As a tutor, I had the opportunity to lead my own sessions that focused on facilitating discussions with peers on curriculum that supplemented the class.

In the end, as a student in Spanish Studies, I gained the knowledge and confidence to speak, write, and read Spanish in professional settings. In doing so, I solidified my education and training as a biliterate professional.

4. What are your future plans?
I plan to continue my role as an instructional coach at my current school. I enjoy working with a community that not only values bilingualism but actively works to teach students in our community the importance of nurturing their linguistic strengths that will ultimately help develop leaders who understand their roles within their own culture and the greater society.

In the next year, I plan on advancing my training by applying to an EdD program in Educational Leadership. This will help further my leadership skills in making transformative and systematic change in bilingual education and teacher training in pursuit of educational equity.
1. Which year did you graduate from UCSC? Which degree(s) did you obtain?
I graduated from UCSC in 2017 with a BA in Spanish Studies.

2. What did you do after graduation?
After graduating, I took a year off and later decided to apply to a few programs with the help and encouragement of my professors at UCSC. Ultimately, I attended the University of Arizona to study for a master’s degree in Hispanic Linguistics. I graduated in Spring 2020, took a much needed break, and I am now searching for a teaching position nearby since moving back to California.

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program?
The training I received at UCSC has given me a solid base for my studies in graduate school. Courses such as Spanish in the U.S. and Sounds of Spanish provided me with a background in phonetics, phonology, and sociolinguistics, which are courses I studied during the first year of my master’s program. I also received valuable training in programs such as Praat to allow me to analyze and manipulate speech. I can recall instances when my experience with Praat helped me tremendously in my phonetics courses.

4. What are your future plans?
As of now, given the current circumstances, I do not plan on returning to school to continue on with a PhD. I plan instead to teach Spanish at a community college or a four-year university nearby.
figuring out exactly how to organize my life. I knew I wanted to go to graduate school, but I also wanted to live in Spain for a year or two before committing to school. Thanks to my Spanish professors at UCSC, I learned about the North American Language and Culture Assistants program in Spain and I applied. I was so happy to be selected to work in two elementary schools in Galicia. I spent a year in the program, and thanks to the generous pay, on weekends I was able to make short trips to neighboring towns and during holiday vacations, I was able to travel to Portugal, Germany, and Austria. Once my contract with the Language and Culture Assistant program was coming to an end it was time for me to decide whether I wanted to renew it or take my first step towards becoming a Spanish professor. I opted for the latter. I submitted applications to 3 different universities in Spain: Universidad de Oviedo, Universidad Autónoma de Madrid, and Universidad Complutense de Madrid. I accepted my offer from Universidad Complutense de Madrid where I now study a master’s called Investigación en la Lengua Española (Spanish Language Research).

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program? The way professors in the Spanish Studies program carried out their classes is very similar to how my current professors organize their instruction too. Working in groups, participating in group discussions, and learning from each other’s ideas is exactly what I experience in my classes. So being exposed to this type of learning during undergrad prepared me to be a better student in my master’s program. More specifically, in terms of content, the Spanish classes at UCSC gave me a strong foundation in topics I am now learning about in much more depth. I may even sometimes use the materials from those classes as reference. In general, to me the Spanish Studies program, and its department was more than just a group of professors and a cohort of students learning Spanish linguistics or literature. It was a community that I belonged to and I truly looked forward to meeting with every class time. It was in this community of supportive professors —or mentors, rather— and classmates where I found my voice, a true connection with my heritage, and really: my identity. In fact, it was because of my experiences in the Spanish Studies program that I decided to become a professor and research topics regarding Spanish in the United States, such as code switching.

4. What are your future plans? In the near future (once I complete my master’s this fall), I will apply to doctorate programs. It would be a dream come true if I could attend the University of Illinois Chicago and be part of their Hispanic Linguistics program.
Foreign Language. I spent the year after graduation working at a coffee shop and saving up as much money as I could while I was checking out master’s programs here in the U.S. and in Spain. I studied abroad for a semester in Barcelona when I was a community college student and I had always wanted to go back, and the cost of studying in Spain is significantly lower than in the U.S. I ended up visiting Barcelona, Pontevedra, Madrid, Bilbao, and Valencia in the fall of 2019 to visit some friends and see if I really wanted to study in Spain. After my trip (and a premature quarter-life crisis), I went ahead and applied to 3 master’s programs in Spain at the Universitat Pompeu Fabra, the Universitat de Barcelona and the Universidad de Navarra. A handful of Skype interviews later and the grueling paperwork process between the U.S. and Spanish consulates, I took a leap of faith and decided to accept my offer to the Universitat Pompeu Fabra to study a “Máster en Discurso: Comunicación, Sociedad y Aprendizaje”. Now I’m currently living in Barcelona! Due to the limitations the pandemic has put on in-person learning, I’ve extended my master’s from one year to two years in order to take full advantage of this learning opportunity. I’m discovering every day just how much I learn both inside and outside of the classroom and I am so grateful to be able to experience this immersion into Spanish and Catalan languages and cultures.

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program?
The UCSC Spanish Studies program was an incredible place for me to grow as a student and gain teamwork skills. The professors are knowledgeable and were always available to help out. One of my favorite parts of Spanish Studies was how our professors encouraged us to communicate and learn together. Teamwork, study groups, peer tutoring, and great communication between myself, my classmates, and our professors were so valuable to my training. We studied beyond just textbooks and theory and really were able to put our learning into practice. I also deeply appreciate the ways in which the department designed curriculum to fit the needs of both heritage Spanish speakers as well as second-language learners, like me.

4. What are your future plans?
Whoa there— heavy question! I’ve got another year ahead of me in this master’s program here in Barcelona and I’m hoping to delve deeper into studying the processes of learning and Critical Discourse Analysis. I’d also like to continue working on becoming fluent in Catalan and continue improving my Spanish. Beyond that, stay tuned!
1. Which year did you graduate from UCSC? Which degree(s) did you obtain?
I am currently double majoring in Spanish Studies and Politics. I completed the Spanish Studies major requirements in Fall '20 and have one quarter left to finish my Politics major requirements.

2. What did you do after graduation?
I will be pursuing a one-year intensive Master's in Teaching Spanish as a Foreign Language (Máster en enseñanza de español como lengua extranjera) at the Universidad de Navarra (Spain) in the fall.

3. How has the training you received in Spanish Studies helped you in your current program?
The Spanish Studies program prepared me well by allowing me to receive a well-rounded understanding of Spanish language and literature. The master’s program is centered around theory and practice and although I haven't integrated into the masters' program yet, I have been told by the program director at the Universidad de Navarra that my educational and professional background made me the perfect candidate for the program.

4. What are your future plans?
My future plans include successfully completing my master’s and moving back to the United States to pursue more teaching experience before I return to school for my Ph.D. in Spanish Literature. I hope to one day become a Spanish Literature professor so I will be working hard to fulfill that goal.
